EDISON SUBMARINE TESTS

E-2, which has been laboratory for battery experiments, to go out of commission.

Chester W. Ninett, head of the submarine division at the Navy Yard, Brooklyn, yesterday received telegraphic instructions from Washington to put the submarine E-2 out of commission. Although the vessel has been tied up since the explosion Jan. 15, which resulted in the death of five men, she has formally been in commission.

The removal of the E-2, which has been the testing laboratory of the Edison submarine storage battery, will leave the yard without a vessel equipped with apparatus to detect the belief that the Navy Department had decided to discontinue its experiments and the apparatus would be dropped from the eligible list.

Dr. Miller Irene Hutchinson, naval representative of the Edison interests, was asked if the company was still in force and if the present action meant the end of experiments with the battery. She said that the verdict of the court of inquiry recommended further experiments. The relations between the department and the Edison storage battery Company have not been changed.
